A 53-year-old woman developed acute renal failure and microangiopathic hemolytic anemia after streptokinase therapy for acute myocardial infarction. On the third day of therapy she received a transfusion of whole blood, fresh frozen plasma and human gamma globulin. Transfusions of plasma or whole blood alone would have been inadequate to counteract the hemolytic-uremic syndrome. Prophylactic treatment of this condition in patients treated with streptokinase should include administration of fresh whole blood.The decision by the District Court of Appeal for the First Circuit in Simons v. Redland Ins. Co. (2018) decided by a 2-1 majority, upholds a ruling by the trial court granting summary judgment to the plaintiff, Simons, in a matter in which Simons sought recovery for damages suffered as a result of an automobile accident. The question in the Simons case arose out of the collision of a car with a dump truck. The dump truck's driver owned a commercial auto policy issued by Redland Insurance Company (Redland). The accident occurred during rush hour traffic, and the dump truck driver was in the process of dropping off a load of garbage. The dump truck collided with a vehicle driven by Simons, resulting in injuries to Simons. Simons did not have automobile insurance. Simons did not make a claim to Redland for coverage until ten months after the collision. Simons sued the dump truck driver, alleging that the dump truck driver was negligent and his negligence was the proximate cause of the collision. Redland answered that the dump truck driver was a permissive user under the terms of its policy with the truck driver, and that the collision was a covered "accident" within the policy. Redland brought a motion for summary judgment, seeking a declaration that the dump truck driver was a permissive user of the truck within the terms of the Redland policy and that Simons' damages were covered under the Redland policy. The trial court granted the motion for summary judgment and ruled that the dump truck driver was a permissive user of the dump truck within the meaning of the policy. On appeal, the First Circuit Court of Appeal ruled that Redland was required to pay
